

WebConnect — now HTML5-compatible.

As you may already know, WebConnect™ from OpenConnect provides superb, built-in terminal emulation that lets your team use your chosen Web browser to access the vital applications and data that exist on your mainframe and midrange enterprise systems. And it does so without compromising security or even having to modify the original applications.

But wait — the story gets even better.

In the past, WebConnect required a browser that was compatible with the popular Java® language. While there still are some browser versions that support Java, the trend in browser development definitely is away from Java dependence and toward reliance on the advanced capabilities of HTML5. So, until recently, using WebConnect required specific browser versions.

That's all changed. Now, WebConnect also is available as an HTML5 client. It's perfect for use on current browser versions which lack Java support.

The WebConnect HTML5 client needs no additional software or third-party software libraries. Instead, it's a purely browser-based emulation client with the same look-and-feel as the Java-based client. In addition, it supports tablets, a variety of custom settings, screen printing, and persistent connection. The WebConnect HTML5 client allows the same convenient copy/paste functionality with which your users are familiar in their PC-based applications; and, like other WebConnect clients, it supports both IND$FILE transfer (for transferring files between the emulator and an IBM mainframe) and IBM® 3287 printer emulation (for printing from mainframe applications).

So, whatever your computing environment, there's now a WebConnect client that fits right in.
